the era of the American Revolution, perhaps there was none possessing more originality of character than General Putnam, who was eccentric and fearless, blunt in his manners -the daring soldier without the polish of the gentleman. He might well be called the Marion of the North, though he disliked disguise, probably from the fact of his lisping, which was very apt to overthrow any trickery he might have in view.

At the time a strong-hold called Horse. neck, some miles above New York, was in possession of the British, Putnam, with a few sturdy patriots was larking in its viplace. Tired of lying in ambush, the men of Tales ever moned from the American prose. became impatient, and importuned the General with questions as to when they were going to have a bout with the foe. One morning be made a speech something to the following effect, which convinced them that something was in the wind :

"Fellers-You have been idle too long, and so have I. I'm going down to Bush's at Horseneck in an hour, with an ox team at Horseneck in an hour, with an exteam and a load of corn. If I come back, I'll A WOMEN of all ages and countries let you know all the particulars; if I should not, let 'em have it, by the hokey !"

He shortly after mounted his exeart, dressed as one of the commonest order of Yankee farmers, and was soon at Bush's staters and daughters will become more removable for resolution, for their specialities, for their, than the First hand self-marries, than the First hands hould have a copy of the British troops. No sooner did the officers highly interesting look. espy him than they began to question him respecting his whereabouts, and finding him as they thought, a complete simpleton, they began to quiz him, and threatened to seize his corn and fodder.

"Well," said they, "we'll take you at your word. Leave the team and provender with us, and we won't require any bail for your appearance."

Putnam gave up the team, and sauntered about for an hour or two, gaining all the information that be wished. He then returned to his men, and told them of the disposition of the foe and his plan of attack.

The morning came, and with it sallied out the gallant band. The British were handled with rough hands, and when they surrendered to Gen. Putnam, the clodhopper, he sareastically remarked-"Gentlemen, I have only kept my word. I told you I would call and pay you for your kindness and condecension."

How a Soldier Feels in Battle. A young French officer thus writes of his first experience in battle :

"Our officers kept us back, for we were not numerous enough to charge upon the enemy. This was, moreover, most prudent, for this murderous fire-so fatal to the white coats-did us but little harm.
